Our final subscription concert of the 2008/09 season on May 3 is a birthday celebration of two composers both born on May 7: Peter Ilyich Tchaikovsky (1840-1893) and Johannes Brahms (1833-1897). And it features two of the cornerstones of the symphonic repertoire — Tchaikovsky’s Piano Concerto No. 1 and Brahms’ Symphony No. 4.

Brahms waited until he was 43 before premiering his First Symphony in 1876. His other three symphonies followed over the next nine years, with the Fourth having its first performance in 1885 by the Meiningen (Germany) Orchestra under the direction of Brahms himself. This orchestra was a favorite of Brahms, as it had been brought to a high technical level by its Music Director Hans von Bulow (who also coined the phrase “Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms” — thereby implying Brahms’ greatness).

All of Brahms’ symphonies are constructed on the standard classical model of four movements and with an orchestra similar in size to that required for Beethoven’s larger symphonies. The third movement of the Fourth Symphony does include a triangle, which is Brahms’ only usage of percussion other than the timpani in any of his symphonies. The Fourth makes its effect through the ongoing development of its noble themes and its feeling of inevitability, which can only be experienced, not described.

Tchaikovsky’s concerto opens with one of the best known melodies in all music, which never returns after the initial two minutes of the piece. Brahms undoubtedly did not approve of this lack of development of the theme, but the melody is so complete that it can’t be varied. Tchaikovsky instead starts over again with more typical themes and creates one of the great exercises in virtuoso pianism with crashing octaves and chordal exchanges between the soloist and orchestra. The third and final movement includes another sweeping lyrical theme whose return at the end epitomizes the romantic piano concerto and will bring our season to a splendid conclusion.

Historical footnote: The Russian pianist for whom Tchaikovsky composed the concerto in 1874 pronounced it “worthless,” so it was not premiered until 1875 in Boston, Massachusetts, conducted by—Hans von Bulow.

BEHIND THE SCENES

I’m particularly looking forward on May 3 to performing one of the great masterpieces of all time…Brahms’ Symphony No. 4. This particular work will forever remind me of the most important and profound music lesson I ever had, coupled with one of my most bizarre experiences. They both involve Leonard Bernstein. First, the music lesson:

When I arrived at Tanglewood in the early summer of 1983 as a student, I couldn’t have been more excited, anxious, and scared. This was the most famous and important place for a young conductor to go to study, and I was THERE. And there was the anticipation that for weeks four and five, Leonard Bernstein was going to be there and that going to make my summer. Gunther Schuller was the director of the Music School at Tanglewood at the time so he gave the opening address. What permeated the entire address was the notion that performers in general (and of course conductors) were ignoring what the composers had written, and were taking too many liberties with the music. The theme was, “STICK TO THE SCORE.” What followed was three weeks of lunacy. Noeton, no habits at the end of pieces, no anything! If it wasn’t written in the score, you didn’t do it, or you got shouted at and ridiculed.

Finally week four and Leonard Bernstein. One of the works we were studying with him was the Brahms 4th Symphony. We were working on the last movement, which has a section which needs to go faster, despite no indication by Brahms to do so. So I asked him: Why is it ok to conduct that section faster? It doesn’t say so in the score, even though it feels right? His response was, “Why is it that all you young conductors only look at tempo markings, but ignore all of the other information? IT DOES say so in the score. Just not with Italian words! Look at the pitches, the harmonies, the rhythms. IT’S ALL THERE.”

That response was life changing for me. It was though he had taken out a key and unlocked a ball and chain from my chest. It’s ALL THERE.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO ONE OF OUR FAVORITE SUBSCRIBERS

This May concert is dedicated to Mayor Lorraine Morton. Mayor Morton has been a long time supporter and supporter of the Evanston Symphony Orchestra. By the time of our concert, a new mayor will have been elected to office but we are delighted to honor Mayor Morton with some wonderful, powerful music. The Evanston Symphony Orchestra won the Mayor’s Award for the Arts in 2003 and Mayor Morton named February 5, 2006 as Evanston Symphony Orchestra Day in honor of our 60th anniversary. Thank you, Mayor Morton, for all you have done for us and the arts in Evanston. Enjoy your retirement. We look forward to seeing you at our concerts in the coming years.

EO’S PENELope Sachs receives
2009 Board President of the Year Award from the Illinois Council of Orchestras

Evanston resident Penelope Sachs, Evanston Symphony Orchestra (ESO) Board president from 2008 to 2009, has received the 2009 Board President of the Year Award from the Illinois Council of Orchestras.

Penelope, who joined the ESO’s board section in 1993, has been responsible for a number of key initiatives. Penelope was the spearhead for the three of the ESO’s most successful outreach programs, including “Play Me a Picture! Paint Me a Tune!”, a unique music education program involving Evanston elementary and middle school students, Music in Your World, a program that introduces music up to 250 Evanston High School and Pre-K students, and the ESO’s participation in Ford Made in America, a program that brings together orchestras in all 50 states in commissioning and premiering new orchestral works.

Born in Ecuador, Sachs grew up in England and received her B.A. Degree from Britsh University. She, her husband and daughter emigrated to the United States in 1993 and settled in Evanston. She is a former employee of the Leo Burnett advertising agency, where she also worked in London and Hong Kong.

MEET CAMERON SMITH – PIANO

What an opportunity! Cameron Smith, the superb piano soloist for our May 3 concert, has graciously agreed to appear at Musical Insights on Friday, May 1 at 1:30 PM at the Presbyterian Homes. He and Maestro Eckart will enrich your knowledge and enjoyment of Sunday’s performance with a musical explication of Tchaikovsky’s Piano Concerto No. 1 – the perfect vehicle to showcase his artistry and virtuosity. As a prelude to his personal appearances on May 1 and 3, Smith will perform live on WFMT (98.7 FM) on April 24 at 12:15 PM in the prestigious Pianoforte Salon Series. Don’t miss it!
